Chodník Cez Dunaj (A Path Across The Danube)

This is a film set in WWII, when Czechoslovakia split into the pro-Nazi Slovak Republic, and the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia. This is a story of fate, persecution, and violence, in which a Slovak and his Czech colleague try to escape to Hungary by crossing the Danube. The images of riding cargo trains and crossing the borders back and forth can be perceived as a metaphor for movement in a circle. Besides being a powerful story, the film offers viewers a better understanding of the phenomenon known as 'Mittel-Europa'.
