Being mostly acclaimed throughout the centuries as the champion of Roman oratory and as innovator of rhetoric, Marcus Tullius Cicero (106-43 B.C.) did not achieve an equally well-established and wide-ranging reputation as a philosophical thinker, especially with regard to the sphere of political thought.

This conference aims to shed a new light on Cicero as political thinker and to foster an appreciation of his thought by bringing into focus some of its main theoretical underpinnings. With a view to this goal, the conference will address a varieties of issues, including Cicero's conception of the relationship between contemplative and political life, possible aspects of analogy with Plato, Aristotle and the Stoics, his view on the nature of constitutions, justice, virtuous statesmanship and citizenship, his theory of natural right and modern and contemporary reception of De Republica, De Legibus and De Officiis.
